Correct, so if i log in as the owner of the Public Page I will see the comment. Then if I want to make it public I can choose to comment and display it to all, but it's up to the admin.

It's a feature we have for IR - for example, Hedge Fund posts a Q letter privately to LPs. One LP comments, that comment is only seen by Admin, Admin can respond and response is only seen by the LP. But, if the admin wants the comment to be seen by all they can repost it from the admin account and frame as they want. They wouldn't approve the comment because the identity of the LP is never made available. That make sense.

Just sent a test comment to see what would happen someone tries to post a comment, so guessing you just decline to let it pass through and the user can see that the comment is no longer pending?
